

Cookie Policy

Cookies are small data files that websites you visit place on your computer to help you do specific tasks there and customize the website's content to your tastes. They may save data on pages where you have provided sensitive information (such as a password), but only after you have been asked. You have consented to the preservation of this information. Cookies may be used on some website pages to give visitors a more personalized web surfing experience; they are not used to identify individuals who only view the website anonymously.

The types of cookies we employ

Session cookies

These cookies are transient because they are removed once your browser is closed. Session cookies keep track of the data you give us as you move around our website's various pages.

You can disable session cookies in your browser's privacy settings, but remember that doing so might make your surfing experience less enjoyable, especially if you disable them on all websites.

Analytical cookies

We employ analytical cookies to track how you use our website and how long you use it. These cookies can be both transient and persistent. While analytical cookies do not reveal personal information about you, they assist us in enhancing how we provide our content to you.

For information on how to disable analytics cookies on your browser, consult the privacy settings there.

Functional cookies

Functional cookies keep track of and preserve your preferences so that your experience on our website is more consistent. Functional cookies help us with this by, among other things, remembering your chosen language each time you visit.

For information on how to reject functional cookies, consult the urgent privacy options of your browser.

Third-Party cookies

These third parties, primarily social media websites like Google+, Facebook, or YouTube, use cookies. We can provide simple sharing options for our material on your social networks and show you the YouTube videos we post thanks to third-party cookies.

You can deactivate the use of these cookies through the privacy settings on your browser, but be aware that doing so will also disable all the features, as mentioned earlier.

Why do we use cookies?

As was already said, we use cookies to ensure that our website functions as well as possible and customize the content to your preferences. As a regulated broker, you can be sure that we won't share any personal information we get with outside parties.

Please read our Privacy policy if you'd like more specific information on how we use your data. Also, please feel free to contact us if you have any more queries.
